

Consultation and Communication

Galilee Energy is committed to ongoing consultation and communication with our stakeholders to ensure the development of positive relationships with the communities in which we operate. Stakeholders include, but are not limited to, landholders, indigenous communities, residents of communities in which Galilee Energy operates, interest groups and government.

To deliver on our commitment of consultation and open and transparent communication, Galilee Energy:

- Provides our stakeholders, especially those from local communities, with access to reliable and timely information about exploration and development activities that may impact them
- Conducts transparent, sincere and respectful consultation with key stakeholders prior to and throughout our operations
- Takes care to understand the social, environmental and economic impact of our activities on stakeholders and takes measures to reduce these impacts as much as is practicable
- Ensures our employees and contractors understand their ethical obligations associated with local communities, their culture/s and the environment
- Contributes to the community by local employment and engagement of local contractors and suppliers where practicable
- Participates in community events where appropriate
- Uses multiple communications tools, such as public meetings, stakeholder forums, online forums, annual reports and individual formal and informal meetings, to effectively communicate with, and received feedback from, our stakeholders.
